Commentary of the manager

The latest releases of leading indicators point to a further economic slowdown. The trade war between the US (president Trump) and most notably China is having negative repercussions globally. The US central bank raised the Fed target rate for a fourth time with a quarter percent in December to 2.5%. The Fed's balance sheet is shrinking. The probability of further rate increases is diminishing giving the surge in markets volatility and a slowdown in growth and inflation pressures. In the US analysts still forecast 2.6% GDP growth for 2019 next year and CPI to be stable at 2.2%. The US 10 year bond yield sunk last quarter to 2.68% from 3.06%. The yield curve is very flat and some shorter rate maturities show already a slight inversion of the rate curve. Credit spreads increased.

The concern about the current economic environment and outlook is still growing in Europe. The announced end of QE by the ECB, the trade issues, the (unrealistic) Italian budget promises, the "gilet jaune" movement in France and Belgium and the bad Brexit soap will restrain growth which is forecast by analysts to come out at 1.6% in 2019. We believe average analysts' forecasts may turn out to be too optimistic. The last quarter the price of US WTI oil crashed from around 77$ to 45$. Also other commodities are suffering except the precious metals (gold +7.7% in USD qoq) which often do well in times of big uncertainty. The core inflation in Euroland is 1% and the headline rate estimation for December is 1.6%. We think CPI can fall abruptly. We don't believe that the ECB can raise rates in the autumn of 2019. The 10 year German bund yield decreased last quarter from 0.47% to 0.24% and the curve continued flattening. The flight to quality pushed spreads to German bunds up in the Eurozone. Italian spreads recovered given their adjustment to the budgetary outlook which saved them for now from being penalized.

The USD ended at 1.147 against the EUR (+1.2% qoq and +4.7% yoy). The JPY ended at 125.83 against the EUR (+4.8% qoq +7.5% yoy). Other winners during the last quarter were emerging market currencies TRY (+15.9%) BRL (+5.8%) and INR (+4.9%). On the losing side we have RUB (-4.9%), NOK (-4.5%), CAD (-4.2%) and MXN (-3.6%). During the last quarter of 2018 the Nasdaq 100 lost 15.8% in EUR while the S&P 500 decreased by 12.8%. The Japanese stock market lost 14.2% in EUR, while the broad eurostoxx gave away 13.2%. The Shanghai stock markets retreated by 10.4% in EUR. Emerging markets in general depreciated by 6.5% in EUR. Globally sector-wise and in EUR the defensive sectors were outperforming. The only winning sector was utilities with +1.6%. Real estate stocks lost 3.2%, communication services went down by 5.5% and consumer staples by 5.8%. Energy stocks lost 19.6%, IT 16.1%, industrial equities 14.6%, consumer discretionary 13.4% and materials gave back 12.4%.

We lowered equities favoring bonds. Political uncertainties and monetary developments will add to the economic reality and contribute to volatility. 43% of the fund is invested in EUR, 27% in USD holdings and 30% in other currencies.
